

What inspired you specifically about legal to have a project there?
 Nepal and most surrounding countries experience a lot of gender oppression. I was looking for an organization that was empowering women and girls through education, specifically a local government organization which I could be very involved in, assigned the best candidate. I wanted to really be immersed and a part of the solution. Nepal has a very high trafficking rate in tourism fields. When I visited Nepal, I fell in love with the country and the people. All the children I met became like my own and I really felt that it was lucky enough to be a woman with a vision therefore I want to become their voice for the rest of the world - that is my purpose.

How does your humanitarian mission translate in your day-to-day life?
 I'm doing this new thing where the opportunity is my priority when I receive myself everything by just being very career and when I should be saying otherwise. It's hard to balance that we are women and we are the strong women.

Are there specific challenges to being a female in the fashion industry?
 Not really in the fashion, or I've seen there are but I can only talk from my experience and I haven't really experienced anything. I do like to work with all different types of people that might have something to do with it.

Can we talk about Instagram? You have quite a following. How do you think about Instagram? You have quite a following. How do you think about Instagram? You have quite a following. How do you think about Instagram?
 I actually think it's a great platform for me to be able to share and influence my followers about gender equality and the importance of educating girls. I love my fans and followers so much, they always write me and let me know how much they inspired them and that is unbelievably humbling. Knowing that the impact of my work is so far from my knowledge with themselves, or to believe in themselves and have confidence in their future is equally as important as me as supporting a girl in Nepal - my number one in female empowerment. I would really like to know that their life is something they want to be but it often comes with a lot of hard work.

If you could inspire one change in others what would it be?
 Oh yes, just that! That's how about that! Empowerment and equality. If everyone could have more confidence and equality for one another the world would be a better place. People spend too much time thinking about themselves and themselves and that's not something we should be doing to ask "how are you?" and only focus on the others.
